The treaty has been would provide him with counsel, and in consent to France for approval and it is possible sequence Sir R. T. Rennie had to return by alterations may be made in it. France is now, judging from late telegraphic advices, in the humour to concede nomothing to the amour propre of China in order to preserve peace, plenty of time since the preliminary hearing to and China will probably be found willing to accept easy terms so long as she can "keep face " in the eyes of her own subjects. nominal recognition of her suzerainty would give her the shadow while France might keep the substance, and with this arrangement, failing anything better, China would in all-likelihood-fall in, for in spite of all her bluster she is really as anxious for peace as France. It is questionable, however, whether France will concede even so much. The allowance by France of the nominal recognition by Annam of China's suzerainty could not fail to weaken her prestige in Annam to some extent, and we take it that she would certainly object to the attendance of a representative of the Emperor of China at Hue to invest the new King. Perhaps, however, she may waive even this objection. The interests of both countries would be so jeopardised by war that we have no doubt a peaceful solution of the difficulty will be arrived at by means of mutual concessions.

I forgot to state in my last letter that there is some feeling among the foreign community at Canton against the American Consul, who, it is alleged, has gratuitonaly sent an astimate of the damage done by the mob to the authorities at Peking, giving the figure as a quarter of a million. This is said to have been done without consultion those who have lost their property. I am also told that when the Vicercy paid his consular visits on Monday, the American Consul gave much offence to the foreign community by the extreme cordiality with which he received His Excellency. The Gorman Consul, I hear, received the Viceroy very differently; he met Chang very coldly and then plainly expressed his feeling that he had not noted as might have been expected on the day of the riot.

This summer fires seem to have been rather unusually plantiful, though fortunately all have theen so far of no great dimensions. One more was added to this year's list on the morning of the 21st instant, a house in Station-street, Sai Ying Pan, being destroyed. The house, No. 16, is a small two-storied family residence, prepared to grant Insurances as follows:and from what we can learn the cause of the in bringing about many such disasters, viz., We take the following precis of the Chine the burning of joss-paper inside the house for religious geremonies. There had been a death in the house recently, and some Buddhist priests were inside performing religious rites, including the burning of joss paper, and in doing so they ignited the dry woodwork of the interior of the house, which took fire like matchwood and in a very brief space the whole interior of the place was in flames. Being rather high up the hill, there was some difficulty in the way of getting a very rapid supply of fire engines upon the spot, but as soon as possible a number of manuals were got to work upon the house, which was almost destroyed by that time. The efforts of the lire brigades were effective howbroke out in, with the exception of some slight damage to the neighbouring houses.
